

Visualising the Revolution:

In her book *Writing The Revolution: Wikipedia and the Survival of Facts in the Digital Age*¹, Heather Ford tells the story of the creation of the Wikipedia article made for the 2011 Egyptian Revolution. Since the creation of this page in 2011, it has been edited over 8,000 times by over 2,000 editors. Ford describes the process an article goes through in order to survive. This poster shows the labour and efforts of Wikipedia editors, with a focus on the early life of the page as events unfolded in real time.

25 January: Day of Revolt.
2011 Egyptian Protests page created by The Egyptian Liberal “Over the next three hours The Egyptian Liberal continues to work alone on the article. He shores up facts and shapes them according to Wikipedia’s rules and standards, thereby establishing a defensive position for the tide that will inevitably peak as news of events in Egypt spreads” (Ford, p54)

28 January: Friday of Anger protests commence

29 January: Curfew imposed

2 February: Mubarak supporters clash with anti-government protesters in Tahrir Square.

10 February: Mubarak addresses nation, but does not resign. Demonstrations escalate.

11 February: 06:00 Vice President Suleiman announces Mubarek has resigned.
A discussion commences on talk page about article name change, with the final decision to be given on 12 February.

“But the page is moved about three hours after the discussion is initiated - that is, long before the decision is made to move the page is announced. Surprisingly, no editor reverts this move, despite it being performed before the final decision on the survey is announced”(Ford p95)

13 February: The Egyptian constitution is suspended, and parliament dissolved.
